Etymology Noun Middle English herberwe, herberowe, herbour, harborow "quarters, lodgings, field camp of an army, shelter for a traveler," going back to Old English herebeorg "shelter, lodgings," going back to Germanic *haribergō- (whence also Old Frisian herberge "lodging, inn," Old Saxon heriberga "army camp," Old High German heriberga, herberga "army camp, lodging for a traveler, accommodations," Old Norse herbergi "inn, room"), from *harja- "body of armed men" + *-bergō- "shelter, protection," noun derivative from the base of *bergan- "to keep safe" (whence Old English beorgan [strong verb class III] "to protect, defend, preserve," Old Saxon gibergan "to protect," Old High German bergan "to save, preserve, conceal," Old Norse bjarga "to save," Gothic baigran "to keep, preserve"), going back to dialectal Indo-European *bhergh-, whence also Old Church Slavic nebrĕgo, nebrĕšti "to disregard, neglect," Czech brh "hayrick, cave, hut" (from *birgŭ), Czech brah "hayrick," Polish bróg "hayrick, barn for hay" (from *borgŭ), Lithuanian birginti "to be sparing, not spend much," Old Irish comairce "protection, refuge" (from *kom-bhorgh-je-) — more at harry Note: Middle English forms such as herboru and harborow appear to show assimilation of the second element of the compound to variants of burgh "town, fortified dwelling" (see borough). — Germanic *bergan- has been associated with *berga- "hill, mountain" (see borrow entry 1), on the assumption that a high place would be a place of refuge, though the Indo-European base underlying *berga- is *bhergh-, not *bhergh-. An etymon bhergh-, however, would rule out the clearly related Balto-Slavic forms, which do not have a palatovelar stop. The link could only be maintained if the Balto-Slavic base was borrowed from Germanic, but the full display of ablaut and diversification of meaning in Slavic make borrowing unlikely. Verb Middle English herberwen, herborewen "to lodge, give shelter to," going back to Old English herbeorgan, going back to Germanic *haribergōjan- (whence also Middle Dutch herbergen "to provide shelter for," Old High German heribergōn "to set up quarters for an army, stay as a guest," Old Norse herbergja "to shelter [a person], lodge"), derivative of *haribergō- "shelter for an armed force" — more at harbor entry 1 First Known Use Noun 12th century, in the meaning defined at sense 1 Verb 12th century, in the meaning defined at transitive sense 1a At Harbor Freight Tools you'll find one of the largest selections of brand-name tools, plus many items you just can't find elsewhere.
